

Elder Abuse Prevention and Response Toolkit

Merri Health
Healthcare that moves with you

How to use this document

The purpose of this toolkit is to provide an elder abuse prevention and response framework for organisations in the Northern Metro region who work with older people and their families or carers. It is useful as a source of information to better understand the causes and types of elder abuse as well as a practical guide to assessing risk and providing appropriate responses when dealing with situations of elder abuse.

Who can use it?

This resource can be used by any workers who have contact with older people and their families or carers, and want to broaden their understanding of elder abuse. It can also be used by workers who witness activities that raise suspicions about elder abuse or who receive disclosures from older clients of abuse and mistreatment.

What does it include?

The toolkit provides information to:

- Explain the factors that contribute to elder abuse
- Encourage organisations to support and work collaboratively with older people in a way that respects their choices while promoting their safety and well-being
- Ensure workers are able to identify situations of elder abuse and take appropriate action
- Assist workers to identify appropriate referral pathways and options for older people experiencing elder abuse

Background

Older people and their families are often reluctant to talk about elder abuse or may not recognise that it is occurring. It can be important for workers to understand the signs of abuse and how to respond to suspicions of abuse occurring. Currently there is no clear picture of the extent of the problem with estimates of between 6 and 10% of older people being affected. That equates to more than 150,000 older people in Victoria experiencing elder abuse.

In 2016 the Victorian Royal Commission into Family Violence (RCFV) included elder abuse as a form of family violence and considered a range of submissions and made recommendations in relation to the abuse and mistreatment of older people. As a result of the RCFV findings, the Victorian government has funded a number of initiatives to prevent and respond to elder abuse. These include the Integrated Model of Care project, currently operating in five health services, which provides staff training to improve awareness about and identification of elder abuse; aims to strengthen elder abuse responses and supports that are respectful of the older person's decisions and offers therapeutic options and support to older people experiencing elder abuse. Ten prevention networks have been established to raise community awareness about elder abuse, including one in the Northern Metro region lead by Merri Health.

What is elder abuse?

Elder abuse is any single or repeated act, occurring within a relationship where there is an implication of trust that results in harm to an older person. The abuse may be physical, sexual, financial or psychological, social and/or neglect and can be carried out by a partner, family member, friend, neighbour or carer.

A number of factors contribute to elder abuse. Many of these are related to our social perceptions of older people. They include:

- Stereotyped views of older people as being less capable and lacking capacity even when they have not been diagnosed with cognitive impairment, such as dementia
- Disrespect of older people who are often the butt of jokes and demeaning comments
- Adult children feeling justified in making decisions on behalf of their parents
- Overlooking exploitation and abuse of older people, which is often seen as the trade-off for care by their family

Both men and women experience elder abuse, however women are at greater risk due to the intersection of ageism and gender inequality. The risk can be worse for older people from culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) communities and those with a disability.

There are a number of circumstances that can put older people at risk of experiencing elder abuse. While these factors do not always mean someone will experience abuse, they can increase the possibility of it occurring. These include:

- Recent loss of a spouse or partner
- Living with their adult children
- Declining physical or mental health and increasing dependence on others for care
- Living in poverty or alternatively, having a large number of assets
- Cultural displacement leading to not feeling confident to talk in English or negotiate systems such as banking and Centrelink
- Social isolation especially for older people living in rural or regional areas or looking after grandchildren
- A history of discrimination especially for those from LGBTI and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities
- Holding a parent category visa which restricts their ability to access support services

Elder abuse may be intensified by a range of issues experienced by the perpetrators of abuse, who are often the adult children of the older person. Perpetrators of abuse can also be the partners, grandchildren, friends, carers and neighbours of the older person. These issues can include:

- Drug or alcohol misuse
- Gambling addiction
- Housing and other financial problems, often as a result of relationship breakdown
- Stress as a result of being a carer
- Feelings of entitlement to the assets of the older person

Types and signs of elder abuse

Elder abuse can take many forms and there are different signs to look out for that can indicate it is occurring. The older person may talk to you about their concerns or things that are happening within the home and family. You may notice that their behaviour has changed and become less confident and more fearful. They may be experiencing a combination of different forms of abuse, for instance emotional abuse can be linked to financial abuse or misuse of their assets. If you have concerns but are not sure whether you are picking up on signs of abuse the following descriptions of different types of abuse may be of help.

Emotional abuse

This can take the form of pressuring, intimidating or bullying. You may notice that the older person is depressed, tearful or angry. They may talk about feeling helpless or useless.

Financial abuse

Examples of this include using the older person's powers of attorney inappropriately or siphoning funds from the older person's bank account. It may be noticed through belongings going missing or significant unexplained withdrawals from the older person's bank accounts. Sometimes it can be more subtle, such as adult children and their family moving into the older person's home and not contributing to household expenses. The older person may be unable to pay household bills or go without health aids, medication or cancel support services.

Physical abuse

Treating the older person roughly, restraining them for instance with ropes, locking them in a room or administering sedating drugs unnecessarily are all forms of physical abuse. Unexplained injuries or pain, cringing, acting fearfully or being over sedated may be warning signs.

Social abuse

The older person may be isolated and restricted from contacting certain family members and friends or engaging in religious or cultural practices. As a result they may appear withdrawn, anxious or lacking self-esteem. They may express feelings of loneliness or feeling unwanted by family members who they believe are not keeping in touch with them.

Sexual abuse

Intimate partner violence can continue into old age while other forms of sexual abuse such as inappropriate touching or watching obscene videos in the older person's presence may occur.

This can manifest through physical injuries, particularly around the buttocks, thighs and genitals; unexplained sexually transmitted diseases and psychological symptoms including anxiety and sleep disturbance.

Neglect

Failing to provide food and a safe, secure home or ignoring needs of the older person for adequate clothing and healthcare constitute neglect as does leaving the older person unattended for long periods of time. As a result the older person may be malnourished, living in squalid, unhygienic, uncomfortable conditions with resultant feelings of distress.

This is not an exhaustive list. When you suspect that elder abuse may be occurring it is always best to discuss your observations and possible action with a supervisor. If you want to know more, free on line professional education is available for anyone working with older people. It can be accessed at <http://elderabuseprevention.e3learning.com.au>.

In addition there are resources available to download on the website of Seniors Rights Victoria at <https://seniorsrights.org.au>.

Key principles

The Prevention Toolkit uses an empowerment framework that recognises the human rights of all adults to live in safety and to be able to make decisions and choices about the way they live their life. The key principles underpinning this framework are:

Professional responsibility

Workers and organisations have a legal responsibility (Duty of Care) to their clients to avoid causing harm or prevent harm from occurring. This obligation is based on the employee's professional expertise and competencies and their job role. It only arises where it is reasonably foreseeable in a particular situation that a client would be harmed by a worker's action or inaction undertaken without reasonable care. For instance a home care worker who found their client at home very unwell would not be expected or required to assess what is wrong with the client but it would be reasonable to expect the home care worker to seek medical assistance for the client. A useful question for a worker to ask themselves is 'what would a reasonable person do or be expected to do in these circumstances?'

Respect for the older person and their decisions

All older people have the right to be treated with dignity and respect and to make their own decisions, including those with cognitive impairment. This includes the right to choose not to take any action in relation to elder abuse. Workers have a responsibility to give regard to the decisions of the older person while working to support their safety and well-being.

Undertaking risk assessments

It is always important to be clear about the level of risk for an older person and to discuss any safety concerns. Situations sometimes arise when an older person does not have capacity to make their own decisions and other people may be making decisions or taking actions that place the older person at an unacceptable level of risk. If the issues of risk are unable to be resolved or reduced, it may be necessary to apply to the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal (VCAT) for the appointment of guardianship or administration orders.

Supported decision making

Supported decision-making provides a framework for older people who may have difficulty with decision-making to choose someone they trust to support them to make valid decisions. It gives the older person the opportunity to play an active and meaningful part in decisions that affect them and can ensure that their right to make decisions is respected and their wishes and preferences are listened to. Many older people have informal supports in place, such as a friend or family member who attends appointments with them or speaks to service providers on their behalf, but a range of new laws in Victoria enable people with decision-making difficulty to legally appoint people of their choice to support them to make, communicate and give effect to their decisions.

Importance of relationships

Many older people want the abuse to stop but at the same time seek to maintain important relationships, which may include the perpetrator. While the older person is at the centre of all decisions and interventions, it is important to take an inclusive approach that recognises and considers existing relationships that play a valuable social, cultural or supportive role.

Community responsibility

The most effective outcomes are achieved when organisations work collaboratively and in partnership with older people and their communities to uphold the rights of older people and respond to elder abuse when it occurs. This includes educating community members who have contact with older people so they understand the harm elder abuse causes and feel confident to provide information and leadership to prevent its occurrence.

Elder abuse response guideline

This is a guideline to accompany the Elder Abuse Response Flowchart for Service Providers. The purpose of the flow chart is to provide community based organisations with a guide to possible interventions and pathways when there are suspicions about or disclosures of elder abuse. The flow chart is not intended to replace the support of specialist agencies who can be contacted for secondary consultation. Variations in individual cases also need to be taken into account.

Responding to elder abuse

There is no mandatory reporting of elder abuse in Victoria, with the exception of approved providers of Commonwealth Government subsidised residential aged care who must report alleged or suspected reportable assaults. All community support workers and service providers have a responsibility to promptly address and respond to any concerns of elder abuse for their clients.

Older people can be reluctant to disclose elder abuse due to:

- Shame and embarrassment
- Fear of the abuse escalating if the perpetrator becomes aware of the disclosure
- Fear of not being believed
- Thinking violence or abuse is a normal part of family life
- Concerns that disclosure will threaten family relationships, particularly if the older person is dependent on the perpetrator for care and support

It is important that any conversations about elder abuse are done in a non-judgemental way that listens to the older person's concerns and provides a safe, supportive and private space to discuss disclosures of abuse. Some helpful questions to identify risks can include:

- We generally ask about how things are going at home...
- Older people can face many stresses so we like to ask about any worries you might have?
- If you are upset or need something who do you talk to?

When risk indicators are high or when there are obvious signs of abuse useful messages can include:

- Conflict in families is very common so I always ask these questions...
 - Has anyone close to you done something that made you feel afraid?
 - Does anyone stop you from being involved in activities or having money?
 - Do you feel safe to be at home?
- You mentioned that x loses their temper. Can you tell me more about that?

Organisational policies

In responding to suspicions or disclosures of elder abuse, staff should refer to their organisation's relevant policies, procedures or protocols to determine the steps they need to take. Workers should always discuss their concerns directly with their supervisor. Clear and accurate documentation must be maintained. Note who, what, when (date and time) where and how. It is also important to document suspicions even if they have not been acknowledged or confirmed.

New Aged Care Quality Standards have been developed by the Commonwealth Department of Health and will apply to all aged care services including residential care, home care, flexible care and services under the Commonwealth Home Support Programme. From July 1 2019 the Aged Care Quality and Safety Commission expects organisations providing aged care services in Australia to comply with the Aged Care Quality Standards.

The Standards cover a broad range of quality and safety areas. Standard 8 includes the requirement that organisations demonstrate effective risk management systems and practices. This incorporates managing high impact or high risks associated with the care of consumers; identifying and responding to abuse and neglect of consumers and supporting consumers to live the best life they can. For more information <https://agedcare.govcms.gov.au/quality/aged-care-quality-standards#Standard>.

Risk assessment and safety planning

The identification, assessment and management of elder abuse risk are key responsibilities for community organisations working to support older people. There are a range of tools and resources available to assist:

- Developing an action plan can help clearly identify, document and communicate agreed referral pathways and interventions.

Action plans should:

- Reflect the older person's wishes
 - Where possible, include a safety plan
 - Indicate family members or personal supports nominated by client
 - Identify existing supports as well as potential support services and referral pathways
 - Provide information about whether there are legally appointed substitute decision makers
 - Outline who is responsible for following up agreed referrals or actions
 - Be monitored and regularly reviewed
- Safety planning is a practical way to assist older people to think about, plan and prepare for their safety and protect themselves from harm. It can include steps to improve safety as well as strategies for responding in situations of abuse. Seniors Rights Victoria has a range of helpful resources on safety planning for service providers, family members and older people. <https://seniorsrights.org.au/resources/>. See page 9 of the toolkit for examples of an action plan and safety plan. There are a number of potential services an older person can be connected to depending on the type of support they are seeking. This includes specialist family violence and elder abuse services that can provide a range of assistance from secondary consultation for workers through to crisis accommodation, financial assistance and legal support for the older person or support for persons of concern. You may need to contact a number of agencies to find the most appropriate support. For more information about services, refer to the listing on page 20 of the toolkit.

- The Family Violence Multi-Agency Risk Assessment and Management Framework (MARAM), previously known as the common risk assessment framework or 'CRAF' has been developed by the Victorian Government to provide policy guidance to organisations that have particular responsibilities in assessing and managing family violence risk. However, the aim of the MARAM Framework is to increase the safety and wellbeing of Victorians by ensuring all relevant services have a shared understanding and contribute effectively to the identification, assessment and management of family violence risk. To achieve this, the Framework has been established in law under a new Part 11 of the Family Violence Protection Act 2008. This requires organisations that are prescribed through regulations, as well as organisations providing funded services relevant to family violence risk assessment and management, to align their policies, procedures, practice guidance and tools to the MARAM Framework. For more information and to check if your agency is a prescribed organisation: <https://www.vic.gov.au/familyviolence/family-safety-victoria/information-sharing-and-risk-management/maram.html>.
- The Victorian Government has also created the Family Violence Information Sharing Scheme (the scheme) under the Family Violence Protection Act 2008. The scheme outlines which organisations are required to share information in relation to family violence matters and how they are to do this. The scheme will be extended to include more organisations during 2019 – 2020. For more information and to check if your organisation is an Information Sharing Entity: <https://www.vic.gov.au/familyviolence/family-safety-victoria/information-sharing-and-risk-management/implementation.html>.

Older people with a disability

Older people who are living with physical disability or cognitive impairment have the same right as all adults to make their own decisions. However, their disability may increase both their risk of experiencing abuse or mistreatment and the severity of that abuse. They may require immediate increased support to safely remove them from the situation or to increase their safety at home.

You may also need to consider whether an older person with a diagnosed or suspected cognitive impairment has the capacity to make reasonable decisions about their safety if they are making decisions that are placing them at significant risk, such as remaining at home in a violent and unsafe environment. In these situations you should identify if there are existing substitute decision makers legally appointed under enduring powers of attorney or Guardianship and Administration orders. If there are no appointed decision makers in place, you may need to develop an intervention plan that includes consulting with the Aged Person's Mental Health Program or with the Office of the Public Advocate in relation to an application to VCAT for the appointment of Guardianship and/or Administration orders.

Elder Abuse Response Flowchart for Service Providers

Service provider suspects or identifies abuse

Is the older person in immediate danger or at risk of significant harm such as an immediate threat to human life or serious physical harm or serious damage to property?
Refer to agency's emergency policy or ring 000.

Report to Supervisor
Staff members should report any suspicions or disclosure of abuse to the relevant supervisor in line with their organisation's policies and procedures.

Not sure what to do?

Seek secondary consultation with:

- Integrated Model of Care Elder abuse liaison officer
- Seniors Rights Victoria

All older people have the right to be treated with dignity and respect and to make their own decisions.

- Consider whether an interpreter or cultural advisor is required
- Discuss the situation and options with the client
- Assess risks, existing services, family and community supports

Substitute Decision Makers

If a client does not have decision making capacity it is important to know if there are any substitute decision maker appointees in place:

- Enduring powers of attorney appointed by the older person to make financial and /or lifestyle decisions
- Medical treatment decision makers for medical decisions
- Guardians and/or administrators

Guardians and/or administrators appointed by the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal (VCAT)

If there are no existing appointees and there are concerns about the older person, consider the need for an application to VCAT for Guardianship & Administration orders.

- Request client's consent to provide further assistance
- Where the older person has difficulty with decision making, work with client to determine who can provide consent. Request consent from substitute decision maker to provide further assistance according to agency policy.

Accurate documentation of all elder abuse concerns must be maintained.

Develop Action Plan

Declines Assistance

- Clearly document discussion about concerns and the supports offered
- Provide information regarding services/ support options and referral contacts for future reference.
- Discuss the benefits of a safety plan and assist to develop safety plan if older person is agreeable

Missing the signs of financial abuse

Athena works with Bev every week for shopping and community access and saw that Bev was losing weight. Athena noticed that Bev had very little food in the cupboard and fridge. She spoke with Bev who said she didn't have enough money to buy food. Athena decided to contact an agency that could assist Bev with food vouchers and bring food from home to ensure that Bev had enough to eat.

What questions could Athena have asked?

Athena asked Bev whether she had big bills or any other changes to her finances that meant she didn't have money for food. Bev said her neighbour had taken her to the bank recently and while they were there he suggested she add his signature to her account so he could go to the bank for her. Bev asked Athena to take her to the bank so she could check her account. The bank confirmed there had been significant withdrawals leaving Bev with only $10 in the account. Bev asked the bank to stop her neighbour's access to the account. Athena advised Bev that she would need to report the situation to her supervisor who visited Bev and discussed where she could get help to protect her finances.

Support for people of concern

Sometimes older people will tolerate abuse and exploitation because they are concerned about the welfare of adult family members who are experiencing mental health issues, gambling problems or addiction to drugs or alcohol. As a result of these problems adult family members may be desperate for money or somewhere to live and exploit the older person's feelings of love and family responsibility. It is important to remember that the older person is your client not the family member who is perpetrating the abuse. There may also be a conflict of interest in trying to help both parties and you may unintentionally collude with the person of concern. If the older person wants assistance for their family member you may find it useful to consult your supervisor or the Integrated Model of Care elder abuse prevention liaison officer about specialist agencies to which they can be referred.

Cultural considerations

Cultural factors may influence how abuse is viewed by older people from Culturally and Linguistically Diverse (CALD) backgrounds and by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander (ATSI) peoples. Responses to elder abuse should address such differences. Being culturally informed and providing sensitive support is an integral component of service provision. It is best to get advice from people or organisations experienced in that particular cultural background so you can develop responses that respect those differences. Do not assume that strategies that have worked in one community will be applicable to people from another group. If the older person has difficulty communicating in English, best practice is to arrange for an interpreter rather than rely on family members to assist.

LGBTIQ+ elders

Many older LGBTI people have experienced various forms of violence, abuse, discrimination and harassment throughout or at different times in their lives and may live in fear of it happening again. For older people, this can include many forms of discrimination from carers, support workers, family or friends such as being involuntarily 'outed' or threats to out their gender or sexuality; being prevented from dressing or presenting according to their identified gender, or a partner being denied access to or involvement in the life of the older person. LGBTI elders often have developed strong resilience in the face of adversity and may feel they are able to deal with the abusive situation on their own or are reluctant to disclose for fear of further abuse or discrimination. If you require further advice in working with an older LGBTIQ+ client there are specialist services who can provide support and information. Refer to list of services on page 20 of the guide for further information.

Support for carers

Those caring for older people may feel unsupported and stressed at times despite loving the person they are caring for and wanting to do the best for them. This can occur particularly when they are juggling work and caring for their own children as well or they may have taken on the role out of a sense of duty or pressure from other family members. Sometimes carers can experience feelings of resentment, anger or frustration and they may cause harm unintentionally while thinking they are acting in their best interests of the older person - for instance by making decisions on their behalf. Older people may be aware of this tension and feel distressed but unable to take action or talk to someone else about the situation. It is best to encourage both parties to seek assistance before the relationship breaks down as this can lead to more serious abuse or neglect of the older person. It may be useful for the principal carer to have a family meeting to seek more assistance from other family members. They can also seek advice about the supports and services available to help to deal with the demands of being a carer by contacting Carers Victoria. Refer to list of services on page 20 of the guide for further information.

Missing the signs of physical abuse

Emel, who lives alone, has been receiving personal care from a carer Janelle. Her daughter Senur visits regularly and Janelle has met her on several occasions. While Janelle was bathing Emel, she saw bruising on her back. She didn't want to alarm Emel so she took a photo and sent it to Senur. A week later Janelle heard that Emel had been hospitalised with serious injuries and that Senur had admitted hitting her mother.

What could Janelle have done differently?

Janelle didn't feel confident enough to ask Emel how she got the bruising on her back so she contacted her supervisor Tracy to talk about her concerns. Tracey contacted Emel and arranged to visit her to talk about the cause of the bruising. Emel disclosed that her daughter Senur had been abusive towards her and that she was scared for her safety. Tracey talked to Emel about providing more support at home and information about services that could help her to maintain her personal safety.
